Death of Sysonby, Failure of Artful, and Crippling of Burgomaster Events of Importance During the Racing Campaign Which Closed with the Benning Meeting.

The fall meeting of the Washington Jockey Club, which ended at Benning on December 1, closed one of the most prosperous and, at the same time, one of the most disastrous seasons of thoroughbred racing ever recorded in the annals of the American turf.

New high records were made in attendance at Jockey Club tracks. New fast time, much of it world's record, was rung up. More money than ever before was invested in the business side, and greater purses and stakes raced for than ever.

But more good horses broke down under he strain of training than ever. No great ass of fine handicap horses was developed. Death carried off the horse of the century, Sysonby, and the great classics were won by horses rated far below the Out of 1,327 Races, 1,097 Winners ones that made turf history in the past.
